

Historical thinking about Trump: authoritarianism, populism, fascism

Bibliography organized by Megan Lundrigan and Elizabeth Heineman [25 Jan 2017]

This bibliography comprises a subset of items submitted to the New Fascism Syllabus project. It present English-language analysis and commentary by authors who engage historical frameworks of authoritarianism, populism, and fascism in order to understand the Trump phenomenon. In many cases the terminology is fluid or extends to closely related “isms” like xenophobia, nationalism, or a more loosely defined “right extremism.” The bibliography organizes essays according to areas of emphasis, but many items are relevant across categories.

A short (and highly idiosyncratic) section at the end includes items referring to related phenomena in other settings, including Europe, Turkey, and India. Another short section references projects interrogating other essential historical frameworks, such as the history of race in the United States.

We welcome additional suggestions. You can find us on twitter (@NewFascSyllabus) or on Facebook (New Fascism Syllabus group).
